She's a big believer that who you are internally shows up externally. And let's be clear—who you are determines what you do.

ON A PERSONAL NOTE...

My roots are Midwestern. My soul was made for SoCal. My heart is global.

I married my Puerto Rican high school sweetheart when we were way too young, but he's still my favorite person ever. We co-parent three teenagers – our oldest son and daughter were adopted from Ethiopia, then I birthed a miracle son.

I'm a deeply faith-full person. I'm an Enneagram 8w7, lover of sunshine and the beach, travel, a good book, red wine, and Mexican food.

APRIL GUIDES LEADERS TO Expand their Influence WITHOUT SACRIFICING THEMSELVES

Leadership isn't just about goals, strategy, and finances — it's about leading yourself holistically first. As you become a more aware, emotionally intelligent leader, you expand your impact, deepen your relationships, and create results that last.

Whether you're leading yourself, a team, or a global movement, the real battle you're facing isn't just external — it's the overwhelm, disconnection, and depletion that silently collapses your influence from the inside out.

Today's high-capacity leaders are stretched thin and burning out.

They don't need more hustle. They don't need more noise.
They need space to get clear, tools to lead holistically, and the courage to lead differently — without losing themselves in the process.

Overwhelm THE DEHABILITATING COST DRAINING LEADERS TODAY

If you can't create space to lead yourself first — with clarity, conviction, and connection — then you and those you lead will stay stuck in survival mode:

- You won't expand your influence.
- You won't have sustainable success.
- You won't grow your people's capacity.
- You won't feel whole in personally or professionally.
- You won't lead the way you're truly called to lead.

This is the hidden risk every leader faces:
It leaves you depleted, reactive, disconnected — and ultimately less impactful than your fullest potential.

April's work interrupts that cycle.
She helps leaders reclaim their wholeness,
so they can expand their influence without sacrificing themselves.

10 POTENTIAL INTERVIEW QUESTIONS

THE STRESS ADVANTAGE:

The #1 Shift High-Achieving Leaders Make for an Unfair Advantage

- #1: You've coached over 1,000 high-performing leaders including C-suite executives and Olympians. What's the most common energy mistake you see them make that's sabotaging their performance?
- #2: You have a counterintuitive belief that managing energy is more important than managing time. For listeners drowning in their calendars, can you break down why this mindset shift is a game-changer?
- #3: You talk about 'completing the stress cycle'—most of our listeners have never heard this term. What does it mean, and what happens when we don't complete it?
- #4: You say stress is an advantage, not something to be avoided or demonized. What is stress good for?
- #5: You mention there are two ways our bodies process stress. Can you walk us through both and explain why one leads to burnout while the other leads to breakthrough?
- #6: For someone listening who feels completely exhausted by 3p every day, what's the first thing they should do tomorrow?
- #7: Two of your six core coaching dimensions are physical and renewal. For leaders who think they're 'too busy' for either, how do stress and burnout actually impact these areas—and their bottom line?
- #8: What's one practical exercise they could do in the next 24 hours to create an immediate shift in their energy management?
- #9: What's the difference between an Energy Burst and an Energy Break, and why does it matter for sustainable success?
- #10: What's your personal energy management strategy? How do you practice what you preach, especially running a company, coaching at your level, and parenting three teenagers?
